CT INDUSTRIES™ RECEIVES ISO 9001:2000 CERTIFICATION ONGOING COMMITMENT TO EXCELLENCE EVIDENT IN QUALITY MANAGEMENT CERTIFICATION

HOUSTON (AUGUST 18, 2006) – CT Industries™ completed its two-year preparation to receive its ISO 9001:2000 certification, which addresses the organization's quality management processes and demonstrates its capabilities to meet customer requirements. The certification applies to all generic product categories, such as hardware, software, processed materials and services.

"The ISO 9001:2000 registration gives us the benefit of an objectively evaluated and enforced quality management system," explains David Zedaker, vice president of quality systems at CT Industries.

"To our customers, our certification is a tangible expression of our commitment to quality."

Zedaker was instrumental in planning and preparing for the company's ISO registration, which is internationally understood and accepted as a sign of quality management. The certification is carried out by registrars and accredited organizations that reviewed the company's quality manual and other documentation to ensure that it meets the quality management standards. Regular audits of the firm's processes ensure that the quality management system described in the documentation is in place and is effective.

"We believe that our total quality management philosophy brings out the best individual skills of all employees at all levels and promotes a total team effort within the company," says Butch Stocker, production manager at CT Industries.

Jay Tavarez, president and owner of CT Industries, fully supported the time and talent required to ready the company for its ISO 9001:2000 certification. According to Tavarez, "Saying that there's no better company in the industry to work with may sound like a bold claim, but I know it's true. Our emphasis has been and always will be on problem prevention and continuous product improvement."
